Meredith Carson, Managing Partner of Golden Equator Consulting, said, “The 4th Industrial Revolution is no longer a theory but rather an emergent reality – where technology shapes the way we live, work, and interact. Industries today have unprecedented opportunity to evolve, by looking beyond disruption to critically examine the aspects of business that can benefit from integrating technology. In doing so, they stand to embrace the potential that this era heralds by forging new and advanced growth pathways.”

A subsidiary of the Singapore conglomerate Golden Equator Group (the Group), GECo is known for its digital transformation initiatives which impact markets and sectors. A recent example was in the traditional marine industry, working with an organisation to build a technology platform which automates information consolidation and projections enabled by Artificial Intelligence, which were formerly disparate data sources and managed by individuals. GECo is also highly regarded for its Startup Bootcamps, including those which it conducts with Brunei's national SME agency Darussalam Enterprise as well as for providing market-entry consulting for companies looking to enter and access Southeast Asia.

Meredith also heads The Simple Sum, a financial literacy and education platform, a business under the Golden Equator Group. In her role, she also leads content-related initiatives across other businesses under the Group including The Legacy Artefact by Golden Equator Wealth, a client-focused multimedia initiative for its client families to pass down the family stories, challenges, and values to the next generations.

In January 2020, Golden Equator Group announced its expansion into Brunei for three of its businesses i.e., Golden Equator Consulting, its multi-family office Golden Equator Wealth, and potentially its community-focused workspace SPECTRUM as well as appointed Aziemah Abdullah as its Country Head in Brunei.
